Leadership is not for the faint-hearted or hesitant. It’s also not for rigid, “my way or the highway” thinkers. Rather, it is a role for bold advocates who are able to collaborate and find creative ways to use and navigate existing systems.

In this interactive workshop we will explore our unique communication styles, perceptions of leadership and management concepts, and strategies for building and nurturing effective teams. Mindful of the cultural differences that naturally occur across organizations—in terms of tradition, policies, practices, and people—we will also explore ways we might set aside differences to invigorate our critical collaboration.
