Deaf-Blind in College
Do you know that most students who are deaf-blind can be successful in college with the right supports and technology?
Do you know that many students who are deaf-blind struggle with their social relationships, similar to many other students?
Do you know there are ways to support students who are deaf-blind in college that can be used for other students?

Here is a 3-page research to practice brief from the National Consortium on Deaf-Blindness provides an understanding of college life and support needs for students who are deaf-blind. In order for students with deaf-blindness to be successful in college, we must first understand what college is like for them. High school years should be spent preparing the proper accommodations, supports, and resources for success. This brief provides some of those strategies and considerations.