Do you teach student’s with high support needs?
Do you struggle to find transition assessment tools that are appropriate?
Would you like a tool with guiding questions to help you collect information about student’s strengths, preferences, interests and needs?

Attached is a tool called ABLE (Analyzing Behavior States and Environments). It includes questions to guide your observations of a student and how they respond to their surroundings such as touch, sound, light, temperature and texture. Also attached is an example of an ABLE tool already filled out for a student. A third document offers suggestions for how to use the information you gather as you write annual goals related to postsecondary goals.

We would like to thank Mary Ann Werbe from Shelbyville Central Schools for providing this week’s Tuesday Tip!
